AUDIOSCRIPT

PART 1

RECEPTIONIST: Lakeside Hotel, good afternoon.

DAVID: Hi, I'd like to book a room. My name is David Clarke, C-L-A-R-K-E.

RECEPTIONIST: How many nights, Mr Clarke?

DAVID: Three nights, arriving on the 18th of June. A double room with a lake view, please.

RECEPTIONIST: That's £95 a night. Breakfast is served in the garden when the weather is fine, and parking is £8 a day.

DAVID: Could you also put a bed in the room for my daughter? I'll pay by card.

RECEPTIONIST: Of course. Your reference number is LH4521.

PART 2

GUIDE: Welcome to the town museum. The building was a bank until 1960. Our favourite exhibit is the old fire engine in the main hall.

GUIDE: You may take photographs anywhere, but without a flash, please. The café closes at half past four.

GUIDE: As you come in, the gift shop is on your left, next to the toilets. The café is in the far corner and the children's room is next to the main hall. The lift is on the right and the cloakroom is beside the entrance.

PART 3

TUTOR: How did the survey go?

MARIA: Not well. Too few people answered, and some of the questions were unclear.

TOM: The government report was out of date, but the university website was very useful for statistics.

MARIA: The newspaper article was biased, and the textbook was too difficult to understand.

TUTOR: The introduction should explain the aim of the study. Use a bar chart for the results.

TOM: We'll both write the conclusion and hand it in next Wednesday.

PART 4

LECTURER: Cacao was first grown in Central America. The Maya made a bitter drink from it, and the Aztecs used the beans as money.

LECTURER: Spanish traders added sugar, and in the 1650s chocolate houses opened in London, although only the rich could afford them.

LECTURER: In 1828 a Dutch chemist invented a machine for removing fat. The first solid bar was sold in 1847, milk chocolate came from Switzerland, and today most cacao is grown in West Africa.
